

The computer may have software installed, but it also must have an operating system, which is actually software. The computer components must be supported by software. There are two types of computers: a laptop and a desktop one. Desktop computer has many component options such as memory, sound card, and video card, while a laptop has only a memory option. The computer may be sold with accessories such as a keyboard, monitor, and/or mouse.